ICFCA is a major forum where researchers from various fields like mathematics, computer science, life sciences, linguistics and social sciences meet and discuss latest advances in Formal Concept Analysis and its applications in various application domains. We invite high-quality submissions on both theoretical foundations of FCA and its applications in social sciences, life sciences, software engineering, linguistics, social networks and Web 2.0.

Possible topics of interest include, but are not limited to:

- FCA theory
- Lattice theory
- Association rules
- Data mining
- Data analysis
- Logics for/and FCA
- FCA in Software Engineering
- FCA in Knowledge Representation
- FCA algorithms
- Lattice drawing
- Data mining in Web 2.0
- Analysis of Social Networks

ICFCA 2010 will take place in Agadir, Morocco, which is located on the shore of the Atlantic Ocean and at the foot of the well-known Atlas Mountain chain. It is a seaside resort with long beaches that attract visitors from all around the world.

Proceedings of ICFCA 2010 will be published by Springer in the LNCS Series.
